A person to whom a lawful oath or affirmation has been administered or who executes a document knowing purports to be an acknowledgment of a lawful oath or affirmation commits false swearing when, in any matter other than a judicial proceeding, he knowingly and willfully makes a false statement. #1:

Friends for Tim Echols violated the following statute: O.C.G.A. § 21-5-41(a)(3) by accepting an in-kind contribution beyond the $6,100 contribution limit as set by the State Ethics Commission. Along with $4,262.69 in payments to own company, Gold Dome Consulting, Mr. Echols' June 30, 2010 Campaign Disclosure Report also reported a $6,100 in-kind contribution from Gold Dome Consulting for "Literature drop in neighborhoods."

The July 1, 2010, Atlanta Journal-Constitution article TeenPact kids' campaign efforts raise questions, outlines how John Oxendine's gubernatorial campaign paid Mr. Echols' company, Gold Dome Consulting, for the "services of 150 home-schooled Christian teenagers." The article also detailed how these children were working for both Mr. Oxendine's and Mr. Echols' campaigns, respectively. In fact, Mr. Oxendine reported an expense of $12,500 to Mr. Echols' company, setting the fair market value for these services. Mr. Echols however, only disclosed a $6,100 in-kind contribution for analogous services.

Friends for Tim Echols violated the following statute: O.C.G.A. § 21-5-34(b)(1)(A) by failing to disclose an additional in-kind contribution from Gold Dome Consulting. As previously stated, Mr. Echols' June 30, 2010 Campaign Disclosure Report reported a $6,100 in-kind contribution from Gold Dome Consulting for "Literature drop in neighborhoods." The July 1, 2010, Atlanta Journal-Constitution article TeenPact kids' campaign efforts raise questions, details how John Oxendine's gubernatorial campaign paid Mr. Echols' company, Gold Dome Consulting, for the "services of 150 home-schooled Christian teenagers." The article also detailed how these children were working for both Mr. Oxendine's campaign and also Mr. Echols' campaign for Public Service Commission. Mr. Echols charged $12,500 to Oxendine Working for Georgia, Inc. for the same services his own campaign received from his company, Gold Dome Consulting. Mr. Echols only disclosed a $6,100 in-kind contribution from Gold Dome Consulting for these services. The $12,500 expenditure by Oxendine Working for Georgia set the market value of services rendered by Gold Dome Consulting. By only disclosing the $6,100 in-kind contribution, Friends for Tim Echols failed to disclose an additional $6,400 in-kind contribution.

#3:

Friends for Tim Echols violated the following statute: O.C.G.A. § 21-5-34(b)(1)(B) by failing to disclose an expense incurred on April 29, 2010 of $3,493.57, constituting candidate qualifying fee made payable to the Georgia Republican Party. The qualifying fee was reported accurately as a contribution by the Georgia Republican Party in their June 30, 2010 Campaign Disclosure, as required by law. Mr. Echols and his campaign committee did not and have not properly disclosed this expense.

TeenPact kids' campaign efforts raise questions

By Aaron Gould Sheinin and Margaret Newkirk
The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

7:22 p.m. Thursday, July 1, 2010

Republican gubernatorial hopeful John Oxendine has paid thousands of dollars for the door-knocking services of 150 home-schooled Christian teenagers in the run-up to this month's primary vote.

The teens are in Georgia at the request of state Public Service Commission candidate Tim Echols, who is the founder of the national nonprofit TeenPact.

A for-profit consulting company owned by Echols sold the TeenPact teens' grass-roots services to Oxendine, in an arrangement that is raising legal and ethical questions for the nonprofit group.

A former head of the tax-exempt division of the IRS said the arrangement could well violate two tenets of laws requiring nonprofits to avoid political campaign work. Two Oxendine rivals, too, said they were approached with the same deal but turned it down because they were concerned it was both distasteful and possibly illegal.

The teenagers are knocking on doors and dropping literature for both Oxendine and Echols. Echols is getting the help for free: He founded TeenPact more than a decade ago, and the kids are campaigning for him because they know him, he said.

The Oxendine campaign, however, paid $12,500 to a for-profit consulting company owned by Echols in exchange for the TeenPact kids' volunteer work. Before deciding to run for the PSC, Echols served as Oxendine's campaign manager.

TeenPact, which teaches home-schooled kids about government, is part of Family Resources Network, a Christian organization that Echols created in 1996. TeenPact kids come to the state Capitol during the legislative session each year to watch government in action.

Family Resources Network is a tax-exempt nonprofit and legally banned from campaigning for candidates. While the kids are TeenPact participants, they're not campaigning through or for TeenPact or Family Resources Network, Echols said. He said the kids are coming to Georgia from around the country on their own, because of their ties to him.

"The Oxendine campaign has hired my consulting firm, Gold Dome Consulting, to do a limited amount of grass-roots work," Echols said. "This includes dropping literature door to door. My team is dropping their [Oxendine's] literature and mine."

Echols said "most of the folks helping with the project are students, but this is not a TeenPact project. I have been paid a fee of $12,500, which will be on their [Oxendine's] disclosure this quarter."

"I have taken great precautions to ensure that no asset of TeenPact is used to aid any campaign, including my own. The IRS has strict rules that prohibit nonprofits from assisting campaigns, and I am in full compliance."

The IRS prohibition encompasses any activity "with evidence of bias" in favor of a candidate or group of candidates or in opposition to a candidate or group of candidates.

The IRS does not care if TeenPact was paid directly, said Marcus Owens, the former head of the tax-exempt division of the IRS.

"If it is a charity, if its assets, its facilities, its employees -- to the extent it has them -- are involved in a political campaign activity," then there could be a problem, Owens said.

If TeenPact computers, membership rolls, e-mail lists, vans, cars -- any asset -- are being used to organize the efforts or to support them, then the IRS would likely frown upon the arrangement, he said.

Janelle Kerlin, an assistant professor of public management and policy at Georgia State University, agreed.

"If they're out there campaigning for John Oxendine for governor, he [Echols] can't be doing that, and they can't be representing TeenPact," she said. "As long as he [Echols] doesn't relate it to the 501c(3) in any way, shape or form, he's OK. But, if he's using TeenPact buses to drive the teens somewhere or any resources are being used, even staff time, he's in trouble."

Echols approached other Georgia campaigns with the offer. Former state Sen. Eric Johnson (R-Savannah) is competing with Oxendine in the race for governor. But in spring 2009, Johnson was planning to run for lieutenant governor when Echols offered him a similar deal.

"Tim Echols directly approached Eric with a substantial financial ask in return for volunteers," Johnson spokesman Ben Fry said. "Eric has been a supporter of the TeenPact program and has worked with the kids at the Capitol. He was concerned that this might put the program in jeopardy and so declined the offer."

How substantial is substantial? "High enough that it didn't smell right," Fry said. "Tens of thousands."

Asked whether Echols wanted the money to be paid to Gold Dome or TeenPact, Fry said the conversation between the two never reached that point.

Echols also offered his services to the gubernatorial campaign of former U.S. Rep. Nathan Deal (R-Ga.), but Deal also turned him down, said Deal spokesman Brian Robinson.

Echols confirmed he talked to Johnson about providing volunteers during his bid for lieutenant governor, as well as other "conservative candidates," and was hired by Oxendine.

Echols wouldn't say what the Oxendine money was going for, but he did say the grass-roots outreach effort required a lot of gas.

Oxendine spokesman Stephen Puetz said the campaign saw nothing wrong with the arrangement.

"We paid him [Echols] a consulting fee for grass-roots activity," he said. "We paid him $12,500, to his Gold Dome Consulting."

Puetz said he understood that the grass-roots activity would be done by kids affiliated with TeenPact, but said the campaign considered them "just kids Echols knew."

Rick Thompson, former executive secretary of the State Ethics Commission, said it doesn't appear that Oxendine has violated the state Ethics in Government Act. But, Thompson said, Echols needs to be careful.

If the TeenPact kids are campaigning for both Echols and Oxendine, then both would have needed to have paid Gold Dome Consulting. If Echols' PSC campaign did not pay his own private consulting firm, then it could be considered that Echols' campaign is receiving an in-kind contribution from Gold Dome, which would have to be reported on his campaign finance disclosure report.

This isn't the first campaign cycle in which Echols has had this type of arrangement with candidates.

His teen volunteers campaigned for Gov. Bobby Jindal in Louisiana and for Ralph Reed's 2006 lieutenant governor bid here. In Reed's case, the candidate paid the teens' expenses directly.

Jim Terry worked with Echols when Terry was working for the National Republican Congressional Committee to elect Republicans to the U.S. House.

"He's got a bunch of kids," Terry said, adding that the NRCC would cover the kids' travel expenses and meals and the teens would volunteer for campaigns.

"They were certainly a tremendous help," Terry said. "All these little home-schooled kids. They've got a work ethic. They're not going to roll up to somebody's door with piercings and sagging pants. They say 'ma'am' and 'sir.'"

Teen outreach for governor hopeful raises ethical questions

by Shannon McCaffrey
Associated Press Writer
07.01.10 - 11:00 pm

ATLANTA - Republican John Oxendine paid his former campaign manager's consulting firm to dispatch Christian teenage volunteers door-to-door promoting his bid for Georgia governor, a move that raises ethical and legal questions about the mingling of politics and nonprofit groups.

The volunteers are dropping Oxendine for governor fliers and promoting fellow Republican Tim Echols' campaign for an open seat on the Public Service Commission. Echols is Oxendine's former campaign manager.

The arrangement suggests the campaigns could be using a nonprofit group for political gain, experts said.

The Internal Revenue Service bans nonprofit groups with tax-exempt status from participating directly or indirectly in political campaigns. They can be stripped of their tax exempt status and fined for violating that ban.

Echols headed TeenPact, a national nonprofit group that trains Christian teenagers to get involved in government. Echols said the teens, some from out of state, were drawn from TeenPact's ranks but that it's not a group project.

"I have taken great precautions to ensure that no asset of TeenPact is used to aid any campaign, including my own," Echols said.

Oxendine's campaign is paying $12,500 to Echols' company, Gold Dome Consulting, to fund the outreach program, Echols said. That money was being used to pay for the students' travel to Georgia and to rent a TeenPact van to canvas neighborhoods for votes, he said.

Frances Hill, a law professor at the University of Miami who specializes in nonprofit tax law, said she wouldn't want "a client doing anything remotely like this."

"Money flying into a nonprofit that has its young devotees dropping off campaign literature ... would seem to place their nonprofit status in jeopardy," she said.

Two of Oxendine's GOP rivals - Eric Johnson and Nathan Deal - said they were approached by Echols with the offer of willing teen volunteers able to pump up their grassroots efforts. Both said no.

Johnson spokesman Ben Fry said the former state senator from Savannah was asked in early 2009 when he was a candidate for lieutenant governor and Echols said for a "substantial financial contribution" he could offer up TeenPact volunteers.

"He felt uncomfortable with the whole situation," Fry said.

Johnson had great respect for the TeenPact program, Fry said, and was worried Echols was placing their nonprofit status at risk.

Deal spokesman Brian Robinson said Echols contacted the campaign soon after the congressman from Gainesville jumped into the gubernatorial race in the spring of 2009. The campaign declined out of a concern about safety and liability of having underage volunteers walking the streets, Robinson said. The students are between 16 and 20 years old, Echols said.

The teens also worked for Ralph Reed's 2006 bid for lieutenant governor without any questions being raised. Reed did not immediately return a phone call seeking comment.

Echols said he "explored opportunities with a number of conservative candidates pursuing a variety of offices and was very pleased to eventually have the chance to work for John Oxendine."

Bill Bozarth, head of the Georgia chapter of Common Cause, said he thought Johnson and Deal's campaigns "made a wise decision in steering clear."

"In my mind it does raise the question of whether this is an appropriate use of a nonprofit," Bozarth said.

Oxendine's campaign manager, Stephen Puetz, said the details were left up to Echols but that the arrangement had been cleared with the campaign's lawyer.

"He (Echols) did say he was going to use people that he knew from different youth organizations that he worked with," Puetz said. "So far we've been happy with the results he's provided."

Oxendine's campaign paid TeenPact in February 2010 to purchase a list of members, according to state disclosure records. The cost was $274.67.

The nonprofit reported gross receipts of $1.2 million in 2008, according to a federal 990 form. Echols was paid $74,667 in wages as the group's president and another $67,269 in other compensation.

In their tax filing, TeenPact, which is also known as Family Resource Network Inc., describes itself as a "a comprehensive leadership experience that brings kids closer to Jesus Christ, makes them better leaders and positions them to impact public policy in their state."

The group said it has trained more than 21,000 students middle and high school students in civic education since 1994.

The IRS ban on political speech by those with tax exempt status has faced some resistance.

In 2008, pastors at six churches either endorsed or made pointed comments about political candidates from their pulpits in defiance of federal tax law. The Alliance Defense Fund, an Arizona-based conservative legal group, orchestrated the pulpit protest to invite IRS scrutiny and a legal fight aimed at finding the restrictions unconstitutional.
